

Creative Communication

The Creative Communication programme for Allwyn is bespoke; co-created on the foundations of the Level 3 Content Creator apprenticeship standard. This means we take the core learning from our Content Creator programme and elevate it—strengthening creative communication, storytelling and content production capabilities for your Impact team.

Workshops and assignments are designed specifically with Allwyn in mind, ensuring that everything taught on programme is immediately applied back into the day-to-day workflow of learners. The programme develops multiplatform storytelling skills, enabling learners to create effective content across written, audio and visual formats, tailored to different audiences and channels.

Apprenticeships at Bauer Academy

At Bauer Academy we deliver apprenticeships differently, with a unique ‘Explore, Apply, Reflect’ approach, always focused on creating real impact for both learner and employer.

We know how to make this learning experience work because we do it every day for thousands of our own people across Bauer Media—from entry-level talent to senior executives and across every function.

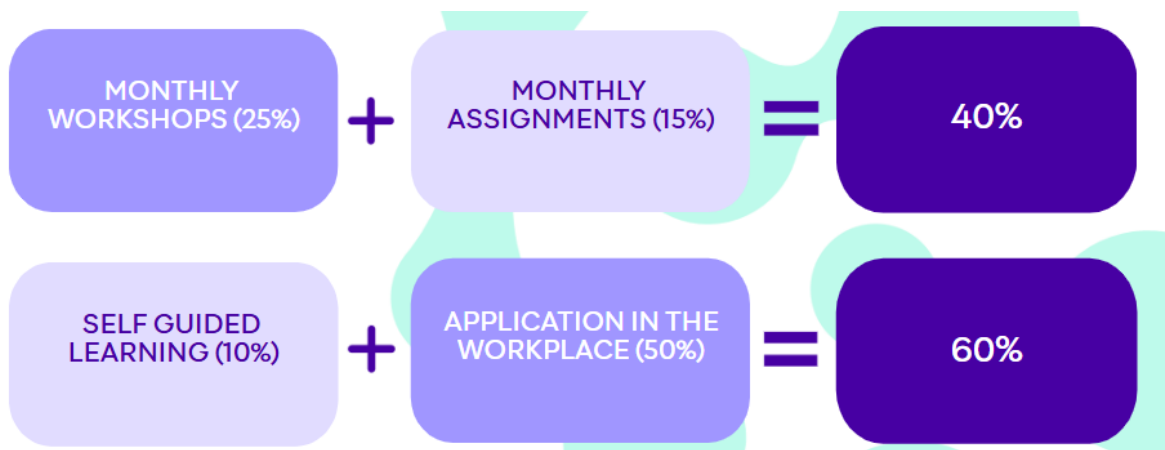

We’ve listened to the common challenges employers experience with apprenticeship learning and have designed our programmes not just to solve these, but to drive meaningful, transformational change through education.

Time

One of the biggest concerns employers have when considering apprenticeships is the time commitment.

That’s why you won’t hear the phrase ‘off the job learning’ with us—because learning is rarely done off the job. We learn by applying new skills into the workflow, and we refer to this as Dedicated Development Time (DDT).

Below, you’ll see a typical breakdown of how this DDT is spent.

Of all the time spent on an apprenticeship 50% is spent applying new learning back into the workplace (i.e. a learner doing their usual day-to-day work, empowered by the skills gained on programme).

The rest of the time will be spent in workshops that are tailored to deliver the specific learning outcomes Allwyn desire for the Impact team, completing assignments that we will create in collaboration with you, and investing in a small amount of self-guided learning.

Support

Learners will gain new skills through their workshops and assignments but it's important that they are able to apply this learning back into their roles.

Line managers and learners will have progress reviews every 8 weeks to check in with the programme tutor. This is an opportunity for the learner's line manager to have a real steer on how the programme benefits their team by setting goals and projects for the learner to complete. This ensures the learner has the best support network around them and that Allwyn's Impact team are seeing the benefits of learning straight away.

Application to Role

This programme has been created specifically for the Allwyn Impact team to transform how learners communicate internally and externally.

That's why all learning is designed with ongoing projects and practical application in mind, to ensure that current organisational challenges and pinch points are tackled in a way that doesn't just fix the issue now, but gives the team ongoing skills that support them well into the future.

Learners will:

- Develop audience-first communication strategies grounded in data and insight
- Create content across multiple platforms and formats (text, audio, video)
- Apply brand guidelines consistently while adapting tone and style for different audiences
- Use AI tools responsibly to enhance creativity, efficiency and insight
- Plan, produce and evaluate content as part of wider campaigns

By embedding learning into live projects, the programme not only addresses current challenges but equips the team with lasting skills that continue to add value well beyond the apprenticeship.

The programme supports learners through the full content lifecycle - from understanding audiences and finding stories, through to content creation, distribution, campaign planning and performance evaluation - ensuring a well-rounded, future-ready creative skillset.
